

Problem Solving

A client interested in developing a new software tool approached me with no established budget or fundraising plans. I worked closely with him to identify his goals and ideal outcome, and with only three discovery conversations, I uncovered a free solution platform to allow him to run trials and gather use cases and data to determine his next steps. Collaboration is ongoing as the client proceeds with the development process.